

Sure

by Patricia Haggard

The air is empty
where you used to sit
next me on my front porch,

where we would bend
close and whisper

secrets
that glued
us together, as sure
as the coarse bricks
we leaned against.

My back now scrapes
against those bricks,

touching the invisible
cracks streaking
through.